Decisions were made to coordinate all activities and finances for the summer under the student body, as well as to prepare the way for the problems facing the Associated Students in the fall.

Other actions taken included the appointment of an activities committee and assignment of various duties to each member of the board. Ken Pasqualetti, activities commissioner, Pat Healy and Barbara Isaacson head the committees.

It was reiterated by the board that all persons taking part in student activities including dramatic productions are required to have student body cards.

Another meeting was held yesterday at which budgets were presented by the various activities. There were no announcements on action taken at press time.

Faculty for the workshop includes 22 student teachers from the college. First major activities will be the Workshop Band Concert this afternoon. (See Activities). This year the workshop is at John Muir School, Page and Webster Streets.

S.F. STATE COLLEGE DRIVES FOR NEW CAMPUS, MORE LAND

Only complaints received about the college, so far, are about the physical plant itself and along with these comes the ever present question, "Is the college going to get a new campus?" That question stimulates a lot of varied answers, some cynical, some optimistic. The 1934 yearbook contains many hopeful statements about a new campus. Students of 1934 had a dream--a dream that was to them almost a reality. Earlier, Dr. Alexander Roberts, when he came to the college as president in 1928, said that S.F. State was next on the list for a new site. (Almost 20 years later, his successor, Dr. J. Paul Leonard, likewise felt that the new plant would soon be a reality).

Actually, the dream approached being a reality when, in 1939, the state legislature authorized the purchase of 40 acres at Lake Merced for a new site. The war held up the building. When Leonard came in 1945 he immediately started work to get more funds, and, sparked by former Senator John F. Shelley of San Francisco, the legislature came through with a mammoth appropriation for the building fund.

Last year, however, Leonard and state officials, after careful study of the increased birth rate and increased population of San Francisco, realized that 40 acres would not be sufficient to accommodate the needs of the estimated 6000 students who would apply for enrollment in 1960. (Nineteen of the 40 acres would be taken up by ditches and roads). To save the cost of expansion at some future date (San Jose State recently had to purchase four city blocks to satisfy its expansion), a bill was introduced into the legislature this year to authorize the purchase of an additional 55 acres. However, the proposed 55 acres were owned by real estate interests who suddenly claimed they were going to build a $10,000,000 housing project. (Homes in the project, it has been said, would sell from $10,000 to $13,000). When the bill was introduced in the legislature, these interests appealed to the city, and the S.F. Board of Supervisors gladly came forth with a resolution requesting the legislature to turn down the pending bill. As a result, 1500 State students marched on the City Hall to urge Mayor Roger Lapham not to sign the resolution. Roger dodged.

The legislature, however, on the urging of ALL of San Francisco's state senators and assemblymen, decided to investigate. A committee toured the campus and declared the conditions "...appalling...shocking ...revolting." The assembly then passed a bill appropriating more than $500,000 to buy the land and a bill which included more than $3,000,000 to go into the building fund. It met opposition, however, in the Senate Finance Committee from senators who had buttonholed by City Lobbyist Don Cleary, Roger's No. 1 boy. The bill lacked one vote of getting out of committee, but, by the concerted effort of ALL of San Francisco's legislators, in a practically unprecedented move, the committee decided to vote a air. Meanwhile one member of the committee had been added to it, and the partisans of the college and education in general were hopeful. However, another adherent had a heart attack, and the bill again failed by one vote. The bill, which included $50,000,000 for other State colleges and the University of California, died in committee before the legislature adjourned. Leonard, in a letter to the faculty this week said hopefully, "Don't give up...we're going to win..we now have $3,583,000 for building with another $1,700,000 available for building construction up toward cost."

The battle is not lost, and many San Franciscans and the News and Chronicle have condemned the supervisors' action and are in there pitching for improved educational facilities. --The Editor.
